

Warne's world is in a spin

SHANE Warne's next career move as a television presenter is well advanced.

Warne returned home to Melbourne last week to launch the apparel range of his label Spinners and develop a chat show with Channel 9 to air for the Ashes.

Warne is excited about the project and the hunt for potential co-hosts.

"We've secured two or three big-name guests at this stage so things are going well," Warne said.

Since retiring from cricket for Australia, Warne has barely stopped working.

Following his underwear range success, Warne has launched a range of men's and boys' T-shirts, jeans and shorts under the Spinners label for Target.

His 11-year-old son, Jackson, helped him in the design process.

And the spin king is looking forward to creating more designs.

Spinners: Shane Warne and model Heath Meldrum.

"I think we've done pretty well for our first attempt," he said. "The more you do it, the better you get."

Model Heath Meldrum helped launch the range last week.

Warne is also running a celebrity poker challenge with Joe Hachem on October 31 for his charity foundation.