Politics pitched up

HE is the master of spin, so could cricketer great Shane Warne (left) be pondering one day making a move from the sporting arena into the political ring. Warne missed most of the campaigning for the federal election because he was overseas, so he arrived back in Australia on August 13 with a fresh set of eyes.

And clearly he did not like what he was seeing. The cricketer ace took to Twitter with some simple suggestions about improving the state of play Down Under. "How about this for election policy!! Be honest and tell us the truth. Follow through on promises! Look after families and the hard workers," he tweeted on Sunday. "People work so hard, 2 jobs to makes ends meet and govt tax them more! "Somethings not right. Encourage and reward workers!! Not penalise. "Education should also be a priority and all schools should start with a 10 min walk or run to start the day! Health crucial for children! "Taxi drivers should have gps in cabs so he/she knows where there going every time!! "I also believe before you are allowed to obtain a driver's licence you should have to sit for an advanced driving test." Warne is on the hustings this weekend, with the Shane Warne Foundation Footy Finals Lunch being held at Crown on Sunday.
